Agenda Revealed for ACE 2024

Enjoy two jam-packed days of high-quality clinical education

With less than two weeks to go until ACE 2024, we can finally unveil the unmissable agenda taking place on March 15&16. These free-to-attend sessions are the perfect place to learn about the newest treatment styles, anatomy, products and business tips, keeping you up-to-date with all the latest in medical aesthetics.

Gain the latest injectable knowledge

At our Symposium Stage, located in the NEW Platinum Hall, you can experience live demonstrations from the specialty's top injectable and pharmaceutical brands. With sessions from Allergan Aesthetics, Evolus, Galderma, Prolenium and many more! Headline Sponsor Teoxane will also return for the third year in a row for two full days of injectable techniques, methods and demonstrations.

Innovations, new solutions and product launches

As well as injectable knowledge, delegates can discover the latest technology and products on the market at our Innovation Stage. From advancements in treating female intimate health to choosing the right laser beam, this agenda has everything you need to advance your clinic offering. Our Masterclass Agenda will cover everything from the future of exosomes to facial contouring and polynucleotides, brought to you by leading aesthetic companies BTL Aesthetics, Croma Pharma, DermaFocus, HA-Derma and VIVACY. You can find more details of our sessions in the Agenda at a Glance included with this month's journal, so make sure to take a look and start planning your experience. SkinCeuticals unveils two new skincare products

Skincare company SkinCeuticals has released two new products to its portfolio. The first product, A.G.E Interrupter Advanced, is a corrective daily moisturiser aimed at targeting visible ageing impacted by collagen decline, explains the company. Ingredients include glycyrrhetic acid for soothing properties, 1% niacinamide to support the skin's moisture barrier and restore firmness and 20% proxylane to target the appearance of firmness and elasticity, notes SkinCeuticals.

The second product, A.G.E Advanced Eye, is designed to improve the appearance of visible effects of collagen degradation. The product reduces the appearance of dark circles and crow's feet around the eyes, while restoring and maintaining moisture, SkinCeuticals says.

Ingredients include 715% concentrated proxylane to target the appearance of firmness and elasticity, 50% peptides to help skin look firmer and 2.5% more caffeine to help reduce puffiness and revive tired eyes, adds the company. Dr Emma Craythorne, consultant dermatologist, said, "This cream is made specifically for the eye, and some people prefer a lighter formula such as this one. This also helps to strengthen the skin barrier. The new generation formula in the A.G.E Interrupter Advanced is jam packed with a combination of emollients, humectants and occlusives that are great for supporting the skin barrier and protecting the skin from additional water loss."

SkinCeuticals will be exhibiting at ACE on March 15-16 on stand E15.

Mental Health

New service opens to support cosmetic surgery patients

Specialist psychotherapy provider Body Image Therapy has been established, specialising in patient mental health pre- and post-cosmetic surgery.

The organisation has been set up by psychotherapists Gina Eason and Sara Crawshaw, who explain that they are providing a mental health assessment service in partnership with cosmetic surgeons, in order to ensure they are psychologically appropriate for treatment.

They explain that their offering comprises guidance on what mental health concerns to look for prior to surgery; standardised evaluation and reports outlining risks and recommendations for each patient; and ongoing patient therapeutic services if needed.

The founders say, "Using mental health assessments, we bring cosmetic surgeons and patients together to support psychological safety, ethical practice and positive outcomes for all."

The service is currently operating at Elite Surgical on Harley Street, London, with further expansion coming soon.
